Coming soon in German
November, 2025

Determined to make a difference, they launch a carbon project—only to confront a series of maddening contradictions embedded deep within the global climate finance system. These aren't just plot twists; they are 25 real-world paradoxes the authors have encountered in decades of work across carbon markets, journalism, and climate entrepreneurship.

And yet, when wielded with care, they may still be our best shot.

Told with emotional depth, sharp dialogue, and a rare behind-the-scenes authenticity, The Carbon Paradox invites readers into the murky waters of carbon credits, offsetting, and climate claims—not with dry analysis, but with story. GHOST SHIP FIRE

A Powerful Memoir of Loss, Tragedy, and the Search for Accountability

On December 2, 2016, a raging fire ripped through an old warehouse in Oakland, California, killing 36 young people. Colleen Dolan stood outside. Her 33-year-old daughter, a well-known San Francisco electronic musician known as Cherushii, and many of her musician friends were missing. Were they trapped inside?

Colleen's story weaves its way through the terrifying events of that December night and her devastating loss, piecing together the gripping story behind the media headlines. It moves to the high-profile criminal trial that finally began two years later and captured the nation with tales of horrifying death at an off-the-grid artists' collective.

As the media circled, families of the victims who just wanted answers and justice were exposed to circus-like courtroom drama. Colleen took detailed notes at the trial. To counter the hysteria, she learned to address the TV news cameras and wrote articles for several San Francisco Bay Area newspapers.

Colleen's story reflects the public's fascination with tragedy and the crippling effect this has in prolonging private grief. Her struggle with big questions about her daughter's death will help other bereaved parents understand they are not alone in their search for answers.
